Chapter 1 by Lewis Peterson

The room is dark when you close your eyes. You are lying on your bed, and as you slowly escape into the world of the dreaming, you realize an eerie darkness pull over you like a cloak. It's shadowy tendrils pulls your eyes shut, and you're gone.

"No!"

You shout, only to be greeted with silence.

You're in the forest. THE forest. The one where you got lost when you were nine years old. You remember it clearly. Your mind immediately returns to the thought of him. And he's standing there. He stands there in his black suit. His long arms at his sides. His faceless white head stares forward as if staring intently upon something. His face without eyes. He stands before you, like he did when you were nine. And he utters the words you almost refuse to hear,

"You know what to do."

You blink and he's gone.

You're all alone.

And you begin your search for the signs.
